http://www.wrh.noaa.gov/sto/brief/wwwa_bc_cal.php

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

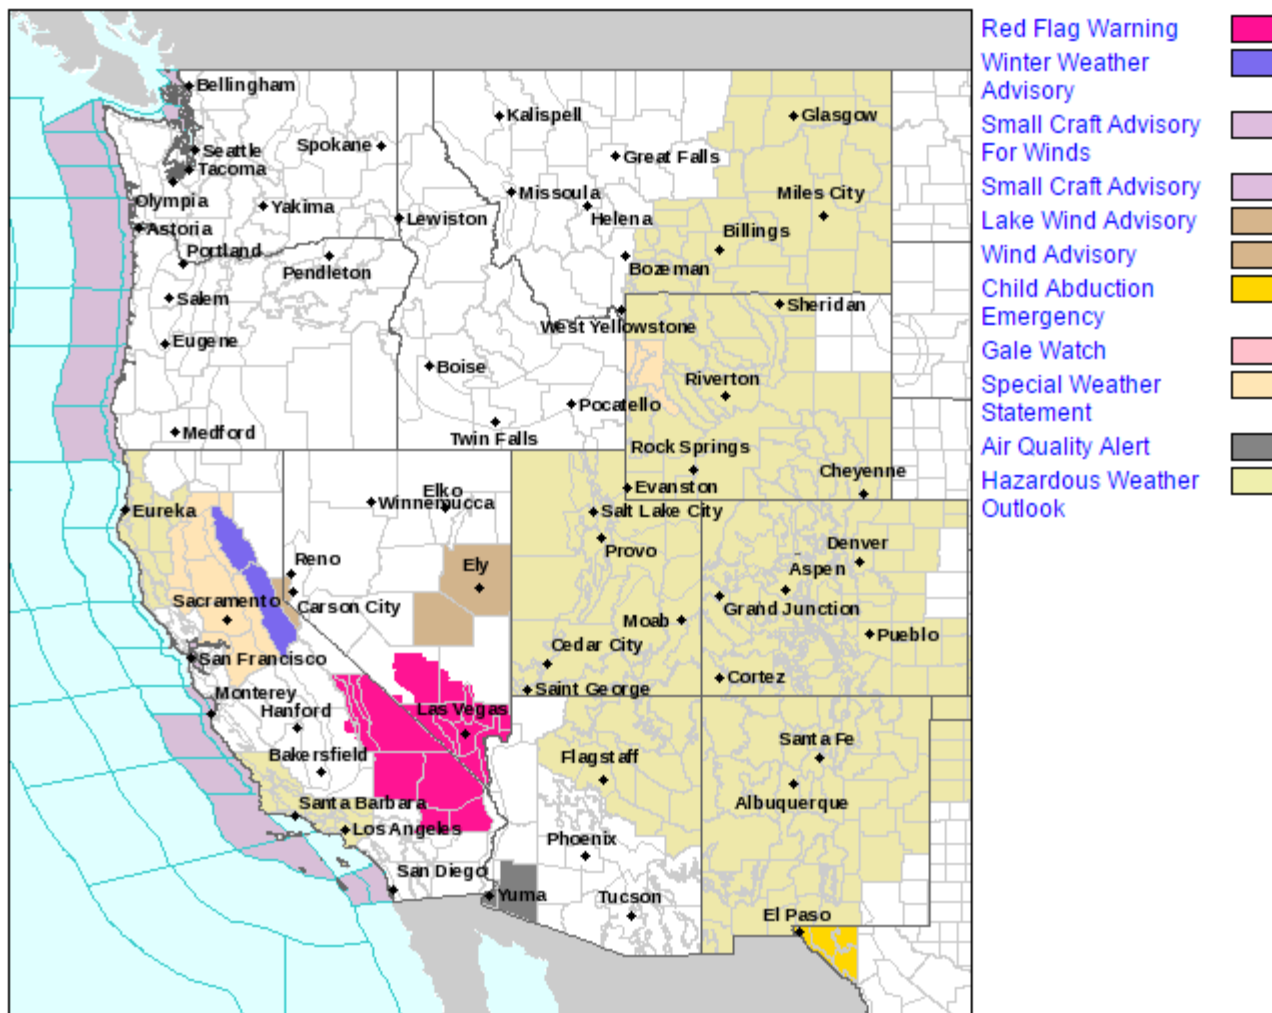

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

Temperatures will be about 10-15 degrees below normal in most areas through Tuesday. Much lighter winds are expected today. Precipitation is expected to develop along the NW coast, mainly north of Cape Mendocino where it will linger today while the rest of Northern California remains dry through today. As the trough moves ashore Sunday, more widespread rain and some mountain snow is expected with many areas of the region likely to see wetting rain/snow, including the Bay Area and locations east of the crest. Far NW CA may have storm totals of 1 to 1.5 inches of rainfall from this system. Lower elevations in the south and eastern areas may only see a trace to 0.10 inch of rainfall. Snow levels could drop as low as 5000 ft. in the north and 6000 ft. in the south late Sunday into early Monday. By Monday afternoon the trough appears likely to have moved east into the Great Basin and precipitation should end by then. A chance of some light rain showers will likely continue Tuesday, mainly in our northern areas. Higher pressure will return Wednesday and Thursday to produce drier and slowly warming weather with the warmest inland areas probably returning to the lower 80s.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

A deep trough will move through the state over the weekend, bringing windy and cooler weather. By Sunday and Monday, highs will only be in the upper 50s and 60s in the mountains to the 70s in the valleys. Northwest winds of 20-30 mph will be possible on the central coast during the afternoon hours this weekend. Additionally, west winds of 20-30 mph with gusts over 40 mph will occur each afternoon in the Kern County Mountains, Antelope Valley, Banning Pass and the Cleveland National Forest Sunday and Monday during the afternoon. Gusty north winds will be likely Sunday night into Monday in Santa Barbara County and the I-5 Corridor. All winds should decrease Monday evening. Light rain will be possible in the Sierras Sunday afternoon and evening, but most of the precipitation will remain north. Warmer weather is expected by the middle of next week.
